

NIOBRARA.

The Town Looming Up and Getting All the Up-River Trade.

An Indian's Advertisement For His Lost Wife.

Capture of a Horse Thief—Other Notes.

Correspondence of THE BEE.

NIOBRARA, October 7.—I found the town somewhat scattered. The old town was located on the southwest side of the Missouri river, about fifty miles west of Yankton, D. T., and is an old trading point, once noted for the hardships and perils incident to a frontier town, but civilization has taken the place of the cowboy, and now I find an energetic people who have turned out en masse and are moving the town about two miles south of west to a new site that is some 16 feet above high water mark, and on level table land; it is sheltered by the high bluffs on either side of the river.

Fifty-two buildings have already gone up and more going. The balance, some 150 buildings, will go as soon as they can be removed from the mud holes they now occupy. Last spring the water was over the counters in the stores and considerable damage was done to the goods, but fortunately no buildings were swept away; this, with the heavy expense of moving, makes the people feel a little poor, but trade is good and every move made now will count toward building here the metropolis of northern Nebraska.

comes from up river, and from the Indian agency. The Yanktons, Santees and Poncas are located near. Last spring Uncle Sam gave $10,000 to the Poncas as a token of his gratitude. About that time the merchants had a picnic, for lo, the poor Indian knew not what he possessed and went straight-way to town and "blew it all in." One old warrior who had fifty-seven silver dollars expended all but one of them one day for notions and clothing. This one he kept over night and on the day following went through all the stores to see what he could find for a dollar, when at night-time he concluded to take its value in needles and went away rejoicing.

Mrs. D. F. Cook, of the Hampton, Va., normal school, arrived here on the 1st instant with thirty-four male and four female Indians that had been attending school at that place. She intends to take a delegation of the native children to the school at Hampton and will return in a few days. The Indians in this vicinity are peaceable and many of them possess industrial tendencies. Some can talk the English language well but will not unless necessity compels them to do so.

While at Niobrara your correspondent was cordially invited to take a whirl among the suburbs a la broncho. My guide having prepared everything to suit our wants we set our face toward the setting sun across the prairie. Nothing worthy of note transpired except the extensive ranges of broken or rather bluff country until we neared the camp of the Poncas, some three miles from town. My attention was called to a post with a small piece of paper which had been cut from some frontier newspaper fastened to it, and for my own gratification I decided to take possession of the same. I had barely done so when to our surprise an Indian, well known here as Yellow Dog, came bounding toward us from the bushes, yelling at the top of his voice and giving us many articulations and gestures which evidently meant fight. "You steal um, you steal um," was all I could get from him.

It was some minutes before my guide, who was a very good interpreter, could find out in what manner we had aggravated the old-time chief. It appears that Yellow Dog had lost a squaw some time since, and the village boys were wanted to put up a job on him. They gave him the paper referred to and told him it was an advertisement for his squaw, and if he would use it he would no doubt hear of her. Yellow Dog, like most Indians, has very reverential ideas in regard to the press and every one connected with it, and concluded to stop the scrap, which read as follows:

"My wife Sarah has Shook my ranch. When I didn't do a darned thing too her an I want it darned. Understood that any man that take her in an keers fur her On my account Wil git himself pumped so Full of lead that Sum tenderfoot will locate him fur a Mineral claim. If she runs Hur face fur goods I want Fur up fur her, and I'll lick the son-of-a-tornado who takes her squaw off even Fur the drink a word to the wise is sufficient and order to work on fools too."

At this stage of affairs my pony had taken a notion to leave me alone to settle the question with my adversary who was bound to believe that I had his lost one, or else I would not have torn down his ad. After a half-hour's course of frantic yells and flourishes with knife and hatchet, we got him cooled off sufficiently for my guide to convey to him the idea that I was a newspaper man and had no use for a squaw. On showing him a copy of THE BEE he began to have faith, but insisted upon me telling him where his wife could be found and I then and there promised that if I found a stray squaw he should be notified. We were then allowed to catch my pony, which was no easy task, and go away, leaving the crowd of aborigines that had assembled to take the part of the old Indian if necessary.

Niobrara wants a railroad and ought to have one, and will have it when the C. & M. runs through to O'Neill, which will be next season. The climate and soil is favorable for developments that will prove remunerative and the time is close at hand when the town will have all the advantages of the more favored eastern Nebraska cities.

For several years a band of horse thieves have had their rendezvous among the bluffs and timber of the Niobrara river, and have made their presence known too often for convenience sake. One day last week one of the gang met his match near Ponca and was picked up by Mr. J. Lawrence, a farmer who recognized the horse he was riding as one recently stolen. Mr. L. conducted the lad to the Dakota City jail where he confessed the theft and gave the sheriff some information concerning the outfit.

Knox county sends two sets of delegates to the republican state convention. The people up here are very patriotic indeed, even the ladies participate at times. The other day one of them considered herself insulted by a stalwart son of toil, and allowed the toe of her No. 6 to come in contact with his "west end," much to the detriment of the shoe, but to the entire satisfaction of the crowd.

A SKELETON'S STORY.

The Dead Fat Woman and her Kinsman, Hannah Battersby.

Philadelphia Press.

"I am no longer the Living Skeleton, the Eighth Wonder of the World, the Star Attraction of the Quintuplex Aggregation of Resplendent Curiosities—no longer do I excite the wonder of the masses and cause the small boy to pinch my attenuated legs and make fun of my muscle—I am getting fat."

John Battersby, for twenty years the thinnest man in America, but who has gained enough flesh during the last seven years to bar him out of the Living Skeleton business, spoke mournfully yesterday as he felt an arm that once could be spanned with thumb and finger from wrist to shoulder. Battersby, with his nephew, now conducts a prosperous blacksmithing business at Main and Tacony streets, Frankford. A painful accident in 1876, injuring his spine and hips, has deprived him of the use of his lower limbs, and he sits in the shop in a comfortable wheelchair every day, directing operations. The Living Skeleton of ten years ago, in a fair, handsome man, a full, sun-browned face, made venerable by an iron-gray beard two feet in length, a pair of laughing gray eyes, with good-natured wrinkles at the corners, a high, square forehead, a well-cut nose and mouth, make up the countenance of a man who has puzzled the most astute physiologists; who has traveled 100,000 miles, and been exhibited before millions. He is the husband of Hannah Battersby, the famous fat woman, who tips the beam to-day at 726 pounds, and who is now traveling on the "road" with a side-show.

OTHELLO'S OCCUPATION GONE.

"Yes, sir," continued the former Shadow with a sigh, "Othello's occupation's gone. When I look back and think of the day I weighed 59 pounds my heart grows sad. I feel that Fate has been unkind to me. Just think of it! Here I am, weighing at least 135 pounds, and increasing. It is something to be proud of. I should have a lantern shine through him. And what do you think was the cause of it? Nothing but an accident. Yes, sir. In 1873 a miserable horse became frightened at one of the dummy engines and threw me out of the wagon, injuring my spine, hips and shoulder. From that day I began to pick up in flesh, and now I'm no card for a five-cent side show." And the shadow of other days glared savagely at his unprofitable legs.

"Are there any other Living Skeletons rattling around through the country now?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, yes," was the reply; "several of 'em. There's Aleck Montague, Dan Major, who is six feet two inches high; Joe Brown, almost thin enough to crawl through a man's pants; and the low named Davis from Vermont, a regular billiard cue, and several others who can cast the same sized shadow as a bean pole. The most active rivals in my day were Isaac Sprague and Calvin Edson, the original Living Skeleton, both of whom were very thin. But I think I could get away with either of 'em, although the two couldn't get up a decent shadow together if they tried. An Irishman who saw me with Barnum said: 'Well, Sprague's thin and Edson's thin, but I'd av yez ain't thinner than both uv them put together!'"

"When did you begin to lose flesh?"

"At the age of 15 or thereabouts," was the reply. "I began falling away without any perceptible cause, going gradually from 120 pounds down to 90 and then to 85. At the age of 21 I weighed just 82 pounds. Barnum took hold of me and I proved quite a card. The lightest I ever weighed was in the spring of 1854, when I tipped the beam at 59. I ate three good meals a day, felt well, never knew a pain or ache, and for a whole year I puzzled the doctors so that they tore their hair and gave up solving the problem as a bad job. I gained slightly in weight after the latter part of '54 and ran up to 62, and then to 67, 69, and finally to 72, at which weight I remained until I met with the accident. In 1862 I married Hannah Perkins, the Fat Woman, who was then a delicate girl of 480 pounds. To-day," continued the bygone Attenuation, "with a flush of honest pride, 'she is the boss fat woman of the world.' I continued in the show business until 1873, as I told you before, and then retired. My wife still travels."

WAS SHE MARY POWER?

"Were you acquainted with Anna Craig, the Fat Woman, who died at Indianapolis on Tuesday, and who is said to have weighed 800 pounds?"

"There is no such woman as Anna Craig," was the emphatic reply, "and there was never a woman lived who actually weighed 800 pounds. A New York paper states in an interview that the dead woman was known also as Rosina Richardson. That is totally incorrect. 'Rosie' Richardson died five years ago in Florida. She was another person altogether. From the description and the mention of the former homes of this woman I think it is Mary Power, who traveled with John Power as her brother, but who was in fact a straggler. And then, as to the claim of her being even one of the heaviest women, it is fudge. Why, my wife beats them all, bless her big body."

"I remember well the day that the old man—that's P. T. Barnum—sent William Coup over to Germany to secure the champion fat woman. It was said that she beat everything. Bill came back on the next steamer and met me at the door of Barnum's museum. He was disgusted. 'Where's Fatty?' said he, meaning my wife. 'Inside,' said I. Bill went in and met her with tears in his eyes. 'Fatty,' said he, in a husky voice, 'I've been over to Germany to get a bigger fat woman than you. I've come back without her. Fatty, you're still the mammoth queen, and the dutch giants are a fraud. She don't come near you by a hundred and a half.' No, indeed," went on Mr. Battersby, as he recounted the incident with great glee, "none of 'em have ever been able to equal her. P. T. Barnum to-day has $5,000 to put up that she is the largest woman in the world."

The spouse of the elephantine Hannah was very much amused at the claims of several alleged giantesses who were traveling through the country on exhibition and spoke particularly of the bearded fat woman.

"I can pick out a couple of women in Frankford," said he, derisively, "who can beat her all to pieces. Why, you can sit alongside of that woman on a railroad car, and I'll bet my head nobody can sit in the same seat with my wife. As if satisfied that this illustration placed his enormous partner on the top round of fame's ladder the past skeleton reverted to his condition and looked at his legs again, with the sad refrain, 'I'm getting fat, I'm getting fat.'"

If Adam had had a game of "Fifteen" placed in his hand at an early period of his existence, the whole course of history might have been materially altered for the better, and if biliousness, indigestion, acidity, dyspepsia, and other ailments, Spring Blossom would not be needed. Price 50 cents, trial bottle 10 cents.

The Cornwallis Family.

The approaching celebration at Yorktown, so closely associated with the name of Cornwallis, will be attended by many direct lineal representatives of those who fought against him, but the famous marquis himself has to-day no representative, his name, who sprang from a noble family, long seated at Brome hall, in Suffolk, of prominence and political influence, one member of which became the second husband of Anne, duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth, whose husband lost his head; for it is a singular fact that ladies whose husbands come to grief on the scaffold almost invariably take themselves as consolation in a second partner for wealth or for woe. The marquis left but one son, who married a sister of the duchess of Richmond (daughter of the duke of Gordon), who gave the immortal ball before Waterloo, but the second marquis left daughters only, and thus the marquisate became extinct. The earl, however, descended to his cousin, a self-seeking pretender to the marquisate, whose indecent clamor for colonial spoils at length provoked Pitt into snubbing him with unaccustomed severity. He left a son who, by marriage inheritance from his father's hoards and his own penuriousness, acquired a very large fortune. The disposal of this became with him a monomania, and he almost always carried his will about his person. He had one daughter by each of his wives. The daughter by the eldest married an excellent Kentish squire, Wykeham-Martin, who, by a circuitous course of devotion, inherited Leeds Castle, an old moated baronial pile, once the home of the Fairfax family, now directly represented in the country by the present peer, who, being an American citizen, does not assume the title. But the bulk of his property, Lord Cornwallis left, with a view specially to accumulation, to the infant child of his second marriage, who thus inherited a fortune of $150,000 a year. The young lady naturally became an object of profound interest to many young men, but to her first season a thousand aspiring hearts heard the fatal news that she was engaged to a country neighbor. There has been one laugh, the marriage, and under her father's will the estates, strictly entailed, will pass to her sister's grandson.

Put the Wires Under Ground.

New York Herald, October 1.

The practicability of putting the telegraph wires under ground is being amply demonstrated by the German government. More than a hundred cities and towns of the Empire are now connected in this way, and the operation of the wires is, we are told, a complete success. The experiment is of very great practical interest and value to our own country, where the question, particularly in the large cities, has been agitated for many years. Thus far the wires are under ground in Washington, and there they are carried along in the sewers by a company which could not obtain the privilege of disfiguring the streets. No difficulty that we have heard of is experienced in the working of these lines. The only obstacle in the way of securing the same results all over the Union is the disinclination of the companies to incur the extra expense.
